I'm very close to my mother. She is one of those rare people who is supportive and available without being pushy or nasal. It's actually pretty brilliant for, as is often the case with husbands, the more space you give them to figure things out for themselves, the more they come around. In my mom's case, this means I fall on much more often when I'm not being chased about my clothes, my hair or the way I raise my kids. I can flog myself just fine, thank you very much. Forever glad to hear my key in her front door - a sign that two grandchildren pot of coffee instantly from becoming a reality chipper - I showed up last year to find her a little protected. All is well? I asked her. Yes, well, no ... You see... Your phone... she was down the right gloomy. Oh no! Did I cut you off when you spoke last night? Her sister just left. I thought she might be upset if my camera, forever on a fritz, died at the last minute. (Kind of like her sister. She stuttered: Oh, your phone worked well. In fact, you may not have known what it was on... and I tried not to listen, but ... There were some noises... I couldn't understand what she was talking about all my life. The children were in bed for hours. Just say it, I urged her. If there was one thing I loved most about my mother, it was that she wasn't passive. She said she meant it. Waiting at that moment was killing me. I heard a lot of sounds. From you and Rex. And I'm not saying it's bad that you make these sounds. But in the future, just make sure your phone is off. It took me a second, and then I burst out laughing. To tell you the truth, as much as I wanted Rex and I to have sex, she meant a scratch on her back. Nothing makes me oooh and more than Rex fresh nails cut all over my skin. Like my drink of choice, rum and the Coke diet, it's relaxing and exhilarating all at once. And although he used to annoy Rex that I make more sounds with my hands than with his appendage, now he finds him cute. And I have a great story to embarrass my mother. Is anything embarrassing ever to happen to you when you left your phone on while on?
